To think differently, one must surround oneself with models who act differently; The word "reiteration" can usefully replace the word "failure"; Standing out from others is the main motivation of innovators. Tony Wagner is an expert in educational sciences, currently in residence at Harvard University. In "Creating Innovators", he argues for the creation of an economy based on innovation and asks how to train those who will have to make it work, so that they all, as far as possible, become innovators. In doing so, he asks what parents, teachers, mentors and
